De mistico Pilcibus cum Humilibus

At the end of his brief description of the "Sunny Summer," the author states that it is worth quoting the passage that follows:

"At this Town in particular, and so on the Towns from this to the next, every day in the month of July, a great number of birds are seen flying about in the sky, and some of them, being attracted by the sweet odors of the flowers, alight on the branches of the trees and stay there for some time, enjoying the sweet odors of the flowers."

In conclusion, the author notes that the Swallow's nest is not built in the same place, but is generally built in the eaves of the roofs of the houses.

In the next section, the author discusses the Swallow's feeding habits, and notes that they are not only attracted by the sweet odors of the flowers, but also by the insects that are found in the eaves of the roofs.

Cultural continuities of France

Professor Simone, the distinguished director of Stato Francese, has done more than merely transform our understanding of the development of the French Renaissance in a series of lectures. His work on the major historical theme of the "French Renaissance" (1949) and "Le Renouveau Franco" (1963) has been widely influential. He has also, more recently, published a highly influential book on the cultural continuity of the French Renaissance, which appeared in 1978., translated into several languages, including English. His work on the "French Renaissance" was recently reprinted by the University of California Press.
